PROGRAM

KEYNOTE: "Forgoing Life-Sustaining Medical Treatment in Children: What's New Since 1994?"

Kathryn L. Weise, MD, MA, Cleveland Clinic Center for Bioethics

While serving on the American Academy of Pediatrics' (AAP) Committee on Bioethics, the presenter asked a simple question: "What is the AAP stance on the Baby Doe regulations?" – federal legislation that changed how neonatologists and pediatricians approached forgoing life-sustaining medical treatment. This led to an update of the 1994 policy statement for those working with families facing end-of-life decisions for infants and children. The update also addresses conundrums that have arisen as medical technology has advanced and families have gained access to a huge amount of information – accurate or not – that drives requests for heroic treatment. In this presentation, the first author of the new AAP policy will discuss the history of end-of-life decision making in infants and children in the US and the development, contents, and implications of the new policy.

JIM BARLOW MEMORIAL LECTURE:

"Ethical Issues & Challenges in the Transition from Pediatric to Adult Care"

Cassandra D. Hirsh, DO, Akron Children's Hospital

Marie DeLord, Cleveland Clinic, Lutheran Hospital

Denise Powers Fabian, MSSA, LISW-S, Akron Children's Hospital

Abigail Nye, MD, Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center

Between the challenges associated with chronic illness in pediatric patients and chronic illness in adult patients lies the challenge of transitioning from pediatric to adult care. This moderated panel includes a medical professional, a parent of a young adult with a chronic illness, and a young adult with a chronic illness. The panelists will discuss challenges facing patients and families transitioning from the pediatric healthcare system to the adult healthcare system as well as some techniques for navigating these challenges that have proven successful.

FOUNDERS' PLENARY: "Protecting and Promoting Patients: Ethics' Role in Working with Guardianship and Patients without Surrogates"

Cristie Cole Horsburgh, JD, Cleveland Clinic

Joshua Crites, PhD, Cleveland Clinic

For most patients who lack decision making capacity, healthcare providers and an identified proxy/surrogate are able to engage in shared decision making without significant ethical difficulty. However, when the proxy is a court-appointed guardian, several factors can render the decision-making process more ethically challenging. Patients who lack both decision making capacity and any authorized surrogate present different challenges, some of which can result in departures from standards of care or even in harm to patients. This session will suggest standard processes involving multiple stakeholders to mitigate against the potential harms associated with these types of cases.
